Adam Putnam's "All of the Above" Energy Strategy

The United States cannot afford to depend on the Middle East and other unstable -- and often unfriendly -- regions for our energy supply. Adam Putnam has led the effort for an "all of the above" energy strategy that includes additional alternative and renewable energy, an increase in domestic energy production, and incentives for greater efficiency and more conservation. This strategy will help to lower energy prices, strengthen our economy, and protect our national security.

Alternative and Renewable Energy

We must invest in alternative and renewable energy so that we can help reduce our reliance on oil and gas. Our energy future relies on the development of wind, solar and biomass energy resources as well as carbon-free nuclear power plants. Adam Putnam believes that production of this energy now will help produce an environmentally sound energy future.

Increase American Energy Production

America has some of the world's largest untapped energy reserves. Adam Putnam believes that we should expand domestic exploration for oil and natural gas immediately. Our dependence on foreign oil can be significantly reduced by safely drilling off our coasts, developing oil reserves in Alaska, and advancing clean coal technologies.

Conservation and Efficiency

Increasing energy production alone will not solve our energy crisis. That's why Adam Putnam supports conservation and incentives for the development of energy efficient technologies. These measures would not only help to save energy, but also reduce the burden energy costs have on the family budget.

Our Congressman, Adam Putnam understands how the current energy crisis and economic situation is affecting Floridians. That's why he has an energy plan to strengthen our economy.
